The Automatic Dishwasher

Today, almost every home in the United States has its own dishwasher. Since washing dishes was traditionally seen as a woman's job, it may seem natural that the inventor of the automatic dishwasher, Josephine Cochrane, was a woman. (26), though, Cochrane's aim was not to cut the amount of housework she had to do. In fact, because Cochrane was the wife of a rich businessman, all the dishes in her home were washed by servants. Her problem was that the dishes often got damaged as they were being washed. Cochrane wanted to find a safer way to clean her valuable dishes.

Cochrane, who was born in 1839, had no training as an engineer. Even so, she came up with a design for a dishwasher that did less damage to dishes than washing them by hand. In this design, the dirty dishes were placed in a cage and then sprayed with hot, soapy water. This not only (27) the dishes but also made them much cleaner. Her invention won a prize at the 1893 Chicago World's Fair, and it worked so well that the same basic design is still used today. Many people were amazed that a woman without any special knowledge of machines could come up with such an (28) design.

During Cochrane's lifetime, her dishwasher was mainly used by hotels and restaurants. This was because it needed large amounts of very hot water. Few people could afford to use so much hot water in their homes. The dishwashers were also expensive to buy. However, hotels and restaurants found that buying one was worth the money because it (29) the number of workers needed. In addition, fewer plates and cups were broken. By the 1950s, it had become possible for people to have dishwashers at home, and one of the main companies that make them today is the same one that Josephine Cochrane started more than a hundred years ago.

A Greener Future

On May 4, 2007, the small town of Greensburg, Kansas, was hit by a powerful tornado. Over two-thirds of the population lost their homes, and most of the town's churches and schools were ruined. Even before the storm, jobs had been getting more difficult to find in Greensburg, and the town's population had been getting smaller. After the storm, many more people moved away. Some of those who remained, however, decided not only to rebuild their town, but to (30) it. They came up with a plan to turn it into the most environmentally friendly town in the United States.

The basic idea was to build houses that did the least possible damage to the environment. At first, many of the town's residents thought this would be too expensive. However, when supporters of the plan explained to them that the new buildings would actually save money in the long term by cutting energy costs, the plan began to seem more (31) to the residents. Many residents decided to rebuild their homes so that they would be as energy-efficient as possible. Moreover, the city decided to make all its public buildings, such as the city hall and the courthouse, meet the highest standards of environmental design. Greensburg was the first place in the United States to do this.

The new policy seems to be bringing benefits to the town's (32), too. Once reports about Greensburg appeared in the media, tourists started coming to visit the town. In addition, the U.S. government offered funds to help Greensburg rebuild, and some large companies that support environmental policies decided to build facilities there. Local leaders hope that more companies, as well as tourists, will come to the town as a result of all the public (33). Without the tornado, it is unlikely that Greensburg would have ever thought of re-creating itself in this way. Now, though, it is looking forward to a brighter and wealthier future as the greenest town in the United States.

 Subject: Interview on The Martin Jones Show

Dear Mr. Bradstock,

It was nice to talk to you on the telephone yesterday. Thank you for agreeing to be a guest on The Martin Jones Show on WPHV next week. After we spoke, Martin told me that he was looking forward to talking to you about your book, The Carrington Affair. He said it was the best mystery novel he had read for a long time.

The interview will be recorded on Friday, October 23, in front of a small audience. We will then edit the interview, and the show will be broadcast on October 25. We will start filming at 7 p.m. on Friday, but please arrive at the studio an hour earlier. That will give our staff time to help you prepare. They will put some makeup on your face and attach a microphone to your clothing. Martin never holds rehearsals because he wants his interviews to be as natural as possible.

You mentioned that this will be your first appearance on a TV talk show. Please relax during the interview. Viewers will be interested to hear about your book, but be careful not to give away too many details. Some people may complain if they hear how it ends.

I look forward to meeting you.

Yours sincerely,
 Kate Stevens
 Producer, WPHV

(34) Yesterday, Martin Jones

- 1 called Mr. Bradstock to talk about his book.
- 2 interviewed a novelist on his television show.
- 3 read a mystery novel written by Kate Stevens.
- 4 said that he had enjoyed The Carrington Affair.

(35) What is one thing that will happen before the interview on Friday?

- 1 An edited version of The Martin Jones Show will be broadcast.
- 2 Staff members will help Mr. Bradstock get ready for the show.
- 3 There will be a rehearsal for Mr. Bradstock and the other guests.
- 4 Martin Jones will record interviews with members of the audience.

(36) Kate Stevens advises Mr. Bradstock to

- 1 read out parts of his book during the interview.
- 2 bring a copy of his book to show members of the audience.
- 3 avoid telling viewers too much about the story in his book.
- 4 tell viewers that he has not appeared on a talk show before.

The Noisy Oceans

One day in 2000, something strange happened in the islands of the Bahamas in the Caribbean. A number of whales landed on the beaches. Although some were saved, six of them died. Later, the United States government found that the cause was the U.S. Navy's use of sonar. Sonar is a system in which sound waves are sent into the ocean to discover objects underwater. These sounds had affected the whales' hearing, causing them to panic and try to escape from the noise. Since then, many similar cases have been reported, and today environmental groups are fighting to limit the use of sonar.

According to scientists, however, sonar is not the only sound that is causing trouble in the oceans. A survey carried out in 2003 in the ocean near California showed that human beings are producing many different kinds of noise in the ocean. Oil companies, for example, use dynamite to look for sources of oil under the ocean floor. The majority of the noise, though, is caused by the increasing number of ships that carry goods and people around the world. The survey showed that the noise level underwater was 10 times higher than it had been in the 1960s.

Scientists fear that all this noise is having a negative influence on sea life. In the darkness of the ocean, both fish and sea mammals use sounds to find their way around. The noise made by humans makes this difficult. One sign of the problem is that whales and other creatures are increasingly crashing into ships, probably because they have become confused. Another sign is that some whales are leaving areas that they have used for thousands of years as places to feed and bring up their families.

Of course, nature also makes noises, but according to Michael Stocker of Ocean Conservation Research in California, the sounds created by human activity are much more stressful than those made by nature. He says that one way to solve the problem would be to change the sounds into ones less harmful to animals. First of all, though, he says, we should limit the amount of sound we put into the oceans.

(37)

In the Bahamas in 2000,

- 1 the U.S. Navy began using whales to explore the ocean.
- 2 an environmental group discovered a new kind of whale.
- 3 some whales died because of sonar used by the U.S. Navy.
- 4 a new sonar system was used to find some lost whales.

(38)

What is one thing the 2003 survey discovered?

- 1 Oil companies are looking for dynamite that makes less noise.
- 2 Sonar is the only sound made by humans that whales can hear.
- 3 The ocean near California is 10 times noisier than other areas.
- 4 Ships are responsible for most of the noise in the oceans.

(39)

Why are scientists concerned about noise in the oceans?

- 1 Whales are having difficulty communicating with humans.
- 2 The behavior of certain sea animals has been changing.
- 3 Ships are crashing into other ships and damaging them.
- 4 Sonar does not work when whales are in the area.

(40)

According to Michael Stocker, one solution may be

- 1 for humans to make noises that are less stressful to animals.
- 2 for people to avoid the areas whales normally use for feeding.
- 3 for conservation groups to help animals find their way.
- 4 for ships to use sonar in order to avoid hitting whales.

Back to the Past

The Civil War between northern and southern states in the United States lasted from 1861 to 1865. Perhaps the most important battle of the war was the one fought at Gettysburg in 1863. Before this battle, the armies of the South were doing well, but at Gettysburg, they suffered a terrible defeat. The battle was a turning point in the war, which was eventually won by the North two years later.

The site of the battle, in the state of Pennsylvania, is now known as Gettysburg National Military Park, and millions of people visit it each year. Recently, park officials have begun a huge project to return the site to the condition it was in when the battle took place. By studying maps and photographs of the time, they analyzed what features of the site influenced the battle. Then they decided what objects should be removed to help tourists understand how the battle was actually fought.

Some of the decisions have been obvious, such as removing electric poles and a motel, but others have led to arguments. In particular, the plan involves cutting down a large number of trees, some of which are more than 100 years old. Only trees that were actually growing at the time of the battle, known as “witness trees,” will be left standing. This has angered environmentalists, who say that the way nature has developed is also part of history. Moreover, they point out that the only way to restore the site properly would be to remove all the people, roads, and stores that are there now.

Don Barger, regional director of the National Park Service, argues that he has a responsibility to preserve history as well as nature. He is not aiming to return every part of the site to exactly the condition it was in, but rather to restore the natural features that affected the battle. He believes that this will allow visitors to the site to understand far more clearly what happened all those years ago, and so to be able to imagine the experience of the soldiers at the time.

The Battle of Gettysburg

- 1 had a great influence on the result of the Civil War.
- 2 took place two years after a turning point in the war.
- 3 lasted from 1863 until the end of the Civil War.
- 4 was the South's biggest success of the war.

(42)

What do officials at Gettysburg National Military Park want to do?

- 1 Take pictures of the battlefield before it is changed.
- 2 Prevent tourists from walking on the site of the battle.
- 3 Make the site more like it was at the time of the battle.
- 4 Move the park to where the battle was actually fought.

(43)

What do some critics of the project think?

- 1 The electric poles and motels are too useful to be removed.
- 2 More people, roads, and stores should be allowed in the park.
- 3 "Witness trees" should be cut down after 100 years have passed.
- 4 The trees that have grown since the battle are also part of history.

(44)

According to Don Barger,

- 1 the goal of the project is to help people imagine what happened at Gettysburg.
- 2 visitors have a responsibility to help restore the site to its original condition.
- 3 many of the natural features of Gettysburg were destroyed during the battle.
- 4 the reason for cutting down the "witness trees" is to allow people to see more clearly.

(45)

Which of the following statements is true?

- 1 The National Park Service recently sold the Gettysburg site.
- 2 Park officials used old maps to decide what objects to remove.
- 3 There will be no trees left in the park after the project is finished.
- 4 Taking care of nature is not part of Don Barger's job.
