A Useful Break

Recently in the United States, a growing number of students have begun taking a gap year—a year’s break between high school and college. This idea is a fairly new one in the U.S. In the United Kingdom and Australia, though, it has been (26) for some time. During this year, most students travel, work, or do volunteer activities. At first, many U.S. colleges were suspicious of gap years. They feared that students would (27) the habit of studying. Now, however, many colleges are recognizing that the experience can be valuable. In fact, they often find that it helps students become more enthusiastic about studying.

A good example is Linda Clark from Maryland, who decided to take a year off after high school. She spent the time working as a volunteer in Ghana and studying in Italy. While she was in Ghana, Clark taught math and English to local children. She also helped the community build a library for its school. After that, she went to Italy, where she studied art. According to Clark, Italy was fun, but Ghana changed her life. This was because her experiences there gave her a new (28). She decided she wanted to help countries like Ghana grow economically. She studied economics at college and now gives business advice to people in developing countries.

Many experts say that the most important thing is not to waste one’s time during a gap year. Many companies have begun helping students organize their gap year by arranging programs for them. However, British author Tom Griffiths warns that such expensive programs may not be the best way to spend the time. According to Griffiths, students do not mature unless they have to deal with situations on their own. “If you’re not in a group,” he says, “you get more out of it. It’s just a fact that if you travel around the world on your own, you (29).”

Patterns of Hope

One major problem for hospitals is the number of patients who catch dangerous diseases while they are being treated for other problems. These diseases are caused by the bacteria that live in hospitals and get into patients' bodies. The usual way to deal with these bacteria has been to use medicines or chemicals to try to kill them. Unfortunately, this method can have the opposite effect and actually cause the bacteria to become stronger. Now, Anthony Brennan, a scientist at the University of Florida, has come up with a new way to reduce bacteria in hospitals—one that could help avoid this (30).

Brennan first thought of his idea when he was working with the United States Navy. The Navy was looking for a way to prevent tiny animals and plants from attaching themselves to ships. Over time, a thick layer of them can develop, and this both damages the ships and reduces the speed at which they can travel. Brennan began thinking about how sea creatures deal with the same problem. Most of those that move slowly, such as whales and turtles, do in fact become covered by such a layer. Slow-moving sharks, though, have skin that remains (31). When Brennan examined these sharks closely, he discovered that this was because of patterns of tiny bumps on their skin. These patterns make it hard for the small creatures and plants to stick to the skin.

Brennan decided to create a (32) surface that could be used in hospitals. Eventually, he created a plastic layer on which patterns like those on shark skin are printed. Experiments have shown that bacteria find it very hard to live on these patterns. Brennan hopes that hospitals will use his plastic layer to cover surfaces where bacteria usually gather. If his idea succeeds, this will be a good example of how much we human beings can (33) from nature.

 Subject: Improving skills at Matterson International

Dear Mr. Davis,

Thank you for your call last week regarding the courses your company offers. It was kind of you to agree to give Matterson International a 10-percent discount off your regular group rates. Having discussed the various options with my co-workers in the Human Resources Department, I have decided to book two training courses.

The first is the beginners' course on the word-processing software Angel 2011. We started using this software two months ago, but many employees are still struggling with it. I would also like you to organize a course on the WB 500 presentation software. The sales manager here at Matterson recently attended a conference and was impressed by how this software was being used by some of our rivals. He now wants everyone in his department to be trained to use it at an advanced level.

You mentioned that we could send employees to your training center to join classes that are open to the public or get a trainer to come to our office for private sessions. I have chosen the latter option as it will allow the trainer to focus on the needs of our employees. Would it be possible for you to come to Matterson International sometime next week so we can go over the details?

Best regards,

Sarah Fuller

Human Resources Manager
 Matterson International

- (34) Last week, Mr. Davis
- 1 held a training course for senior managers at Matterson International.
 - 2 told Sarah Fuller that his company could provide training courses at a reduced price.
 - 3 joined a discussion at Matterson International's Human Resources Department.
 - 4 accepted a reservation for two training courses from one of Sarah Fuller's co-workers.
- (35) What is one thing Sarah Fuller says about the WB 500 software?
- 1 It was created by one of Matterson International's rivals.
 - 2 Many employees at Matterson International already have it.
 - 3 The course on it should be suitable for people who are beginners at using computers.
 - 4 The sales manager wants members of his department to be able to use it well.
- (36) What has Sarah Fuller decided to do?
- 1 Have employees choose the person who will teach them.
 - 2 Send employees to join classes that are open to the public.
 - 3 Arrange for the classes to be held at Matterson International's office.
 - 4 Telephone Mr. Davis next week to go over the details of the classes.

Robot Manners

As robot technology improves, robots are becoming an increasingly important part of our daily lives. Robots, of course, have many advantages over human beings. They work hard, never need to rest, do not complain, and do not need to be paid. Moreover, by performing simple tasks, they make it possible for human workers to focus on jobs that require more skills. Yet as more robots enter the workplace, their creators face a new problem—how to design them so that human beings can get along with them.

A typical robot today is TUG, which is now used in more than 50 hospitals in the United States. TUG is a box-like robot on wheels that is able to carry things, push carts, and deliver messages. TUG is programmed to remember all the places in a hospital. When a nurse wishes to send something to another nurse, for example, instead of having to waste time carrying it, he or she puts it on TUG, selects the destination, and the robot goes there on its own. Hospital managers like TUG because it allows hospital workers to concentrate on the jobs they were originally trained to do.

Unfortunately, not all hospital workers like TUG. Bilge Mutlu, a specialist in human-robot interaction at the University of Wisconsin–Madison, studied the reactions of workers to TUG in one hospital. He found that many people disliked the robot's lack of manners. For example, when a human being delivers a message to someone who is talking on the telephone, he or she will usually wait until the person on the phone is free. TUG simply interrupts the call and loudly announces, "TUG has arrived."

Aethon, the company that makes TUG, is taking Mutlu's research seriously. Aethon has already programmed TUG to speak more quietly at night. However, it is very difficult to program a robot to be polite. One possible answer, being developed by scientists at the University of Washington, in Seattle, is a program that allows robots to analyze and imitate human behavior. This will only work, however, if the human beings that the robots copy are themselves behaving politely.

- (37) What will robot designers need to do from now on?
- 1 Pay robots for performing simple tasks.
 - 2 Prevent robots from replacing human beings.
 - 3 Build robots that can concentrate on highly skilled jobs.
 - 4 Create robots that people feel comfortable working with.

- (38) Why do people who run hospitals like TUG?
- 1 It can guess what task it should do next.
 - 2 It can move easily from one hospital to another.
 - 3 It can stop workers from wasting time on simple jobs.
 - 4 It can help new nurses find their way around the hospital.

- (39) Bilge Mutlu discovered that people in one hospital
- 1 felt that the way TUG acted was impolite.
 - 2 disliked it when TUG came too close to them.
 - 3 refused to listen to TUG's messages.
 - 4 thought that TUG worked too hard.

- (40) What are some scientists trying to do?
- 1 Use robots to teach people how to be more polite to each other.
 - 2 Program robots to behave more like human beings.
 - 3 Analyze the reasons why robots sometimes stop working.
 - 4 Design robots that do more work at night than they do in the day.

Saving a Copy

In 1993, director Steven Spielberg had a big hit with his movie Jurassic Park. The movie was about a theme park where people could see cloned dinosaurs, but it was criticized by some scientists as unrealistic. Dinosaurs, they said, could never be brought back to life by cloning. What those scientists did not know, though, was how much progress cloning would make after the movie was produced. In particular, a new method known as “interspecies cloning” has brought the world of Spielberg’s movie much closer to reality.

Interspecies cloning means using the egg of one species of animal to produce a clone of another species. First, an egg is taken out of a female animal and the DNA is removed. Then the DNA of another animal is put into the egg. Electricity is passed through the egg, causing it to start growing. The egg is then put back into the mother’s body, where it develops into a normal baby. Scientists have so far managed to create a number of animal clones in this way.

One scientist who has been working on interspecies cloning is Betsy Dresser of the Audubon Nature Institute in New Orleans. Dresser’s goal, however, has not been to bring extinct animals back to life. Rather, she hopes to prevent animals from becoming extinct in the future. So far, she has produced clones of African wildcats by putting their DNA into the eggs of ordinary pet cats. The clones she has produced have not only been healthy, but have also given birth to kittens themselves. She believes that this kind of cloning will allow scientists to increase animal populations when it is necessary.

With this goal in mind, Dresser has been creating a “frozen zoo” of endangered animals. She has collected tiny pieces of skin containing the DNA of hundreds of different species from around the world. She keeps these frozen in small containers so that if it becomes necessary in the future, clones can be created. Not all experts agree with the idea of creating clones. Some of them say that it is more important to prevent damage to the environment. In this way, animals could continue to live where they are. Dresser agrees, but argues that if it is a choice between extinction and cloning, it is better to choose cloning.

(41) Why did some scientists criticize Jurassic Park?

- 1 They disliked using dinosaurs for entertainment.
- 2 They opposed the idea of creating fake dinosaurs.
- 3 They doubted that dinosaurs could ever be cloned.
- 4 They thought the dinosaurs in it were the wrong size.

(42) What is one way that scientists have been able to create animal clones?

- 1 By replacing the DNA in an animal's egg with the DNA of another animal.
- 2 By raising many different kinds of animals to be used for collecting DNA.
- 3 By gradually changing DNA to create a new animal.
- 4 By using electricity to create DNA in a laboratory.

(43) What is Betsy Dresser trying to do?

- 1 Increase the variety of pets that people keep.
- 2 Create new species that can avoid extinction.
- 3 Show that cloned animals are not healthy.
- 4 Make it possible to stop species from dying out.

(44) Why are some experts against cloning?

- 1 They are concerned about the effect of clones on other animals.
- 2 They worry that cloning will only be able to help a few species.
- 3 They think that it would be better to protect the places where animals live.
- 4 They believe that storing animal DNA for the future will be too expensive.

(45) Which of the following statements is true?

- 1 Jurassic Park seems much more realistic now than when it was first shown.
- 2 Dresser has collected clones of many different species from all over the world.
- 3 There is a possibility that even ordinary pets like cats will become endangered.
- 4 It is still impossible to create clones that are able to produce babies of their own.
