Sandwich Surprise

Last summer, Miki visited Ottawa in Canada as an exchange student. Miki's exchange partner was a girl named Sarah, and Miki stayed with Sarah's family. During her stay, Miki attended classes with Sarah at her high school. Every morning, Sarah's mother (34) a lunch for the girls to take with them to school.

On the first day, Sarah's mother made ham sandwiches. However, on the second day, she gave the girls some sandwiches that surprised Miki. The sandwiches had peanut butter and banana slices in them. Miki had never heard of this combination before, and she was not sure if she would like the sandwiches. But when she tried one at lunchtime, she thought it was (35). In fact, Miki liked the sandwiches so much that even after she returned to Japan, she often made them for herself.

Lighthouse Homes

One way that sailors keep their ships safe at sea is to look for lighthouses. These are tall towers with a bright light at the top that warn ships not to come too close to dangerous parts of the coast. Lighthouses are also useful because they show sailors which part of the coast they are near. These days, however, most ships have electronic tools for navigation. As a result, lighthouses are less (36) than they were in the past.

Many lighthouses in the United States were built more than 100 years ago. These lighthouses used oil lamps for their lights. Each lighthouse had a lighthouse keeper. The keeper's job was to light the oil lamp every evening, make sure that it kept burning all night, and put it out at sunrise. Because of this, older lighthouses usually have places where lighthouse keepers and their families could (37).

In recent years, the United States government has started selling some of its older lighthouses. At first, only certain groups could buy these lighthouses. But since 2000, ordinary people have been allowed to buy them, too. Many people are interested in owning a lighthouse because they like the idea of having a home that is surrounded by nature and has wonderful views. However, people who buy lighthouses from the government have to show that they will (38) them properly. They must paint the walls regularly and be careful not to change the way the lighthouse looks when they do repairs. This is because many lighthouses are important historical buildings that add to the beauty of America's coastlines.

 To: Emily Gosling <emilygosling@mailaroundtheworld.com>
 Date: April 20, 2009
 Subject: A big favor

Dear Aunt Emily,
 Thanks for your e-mail and the photographs from Robert's birthday party. It looks like Robert and his friends had a great time, but I'm sure it was hard work for you and Uncle Gavin! I'm glad that Robert liked the toy car I sent him. I'm enjoying college. My exams start soon, so I've been studying hard.
 I had some great news yesterday. I've been offered a job as a coach at a soccer camp this summer. I'm going to be teaching soccer to children aged 10 to 14 years old. It will be a good experience for me because, as you know, I want to teach P.E. at a junior high school after I leave college.
 The job is in Halesville, the town next to yours. That's why I'd like to ask you and Uncle Gavin a big favor. Would it be possible for me to stay at your house while I'm working at the camp? The job is from August 14 to August 28. I found out that there's a bus that goes from near your house to Halesville. Of course, I'll pay for my meals and help around the house. I can also babysit Robert if you and Uncle Gavin want to go out together sometimes.
 Tell me what you think.
 Love,
 Nicholas

The Muppet Maker

Most people in the United States are familiar with the puppets that Jim Henson created for his TV shows. Henson got his first part-time job in 1954, while he was still a high school student. He worked for a TV station in Washington, D.C., making puppets for a children's show. Henson had been making puppets as a hobby since he was a child, so he was happy to get this job.

Later, when Henson was in college, he worked on another children's show called Sam and Friends. The puppets that Henson created for Sam and Friends were different from the ones that were usually seen on television at that time. Most puppets on television were made of wood, but Henson used materials like rubber and cloth to make his. Because these materials are soft, the puppets that Henson created could be used to show a lot of different feelings. He called these puppets "Muppets."

After Henson graduated from college, he continued to make Muppets for TV shows and commercials. Then, in 1969, he was asked to work on a new show called Sesame Street that taught English, math, and everyday skills to young children. The Muppets sang, danced, and had conversations with the actors. The show was very successful, and the Muppets became famous all over the United States.

Henson enjoyed working on Sesame Street, but he wanted to create shows that would be watched by people of all ages. He achieved this in 1976, when he started a family variety show called The Muppet Show. By 1978, it had over 235 million viewers in 106 countries. Henson also made many other shows and several movies. Jim Henson died in 1990, but he will always be remembered for his Muppets, which are loved by both children and adults around the world.

- 2 They had names chosen by television viewers.
- 3 They were made of a different type of wood.
- 4 They were created from soft materials.

(44) How did the Muppets become famous all over the United States?

- 1 Henson took them to schools to teach children.
- 2 They were used instead of actors in commercials.
- 3 They appeared on a TV show for children.
- 4 Henson wrote a song about them.

(45) What was Henson able to do in 1976?

- 1 Teach young children how to make their own puppets.
- 2 Start a show that could be enjoyed by adults and children.
- 3 Build a school with the money he made from Sesame Street.
- 4 Make a movie using actors from many different countries.
