The Right Car

Shortly before Kenji and Chiharu got married, Kenji bought a large car. Kenji often drove Chiharu to the countryside in it on weekends. Chiharu also used the car to go shopping. However, she did not enjoy driving it because it was hard to park. She said that it would be good to have a second car. Kenji (34), and they bought one that was small and easy to drive.

They continued using Kenji's car on weekends because Kenji thought it was better for long trips. One Saturday, Kenji's parents invited them to visit. Kenji's car was being repaired, so they went in Chiharu's car. Because it was a long way, they took turns driving. Kenji was surprised by how (35) the car was. He started to think that they only needed one car and that they should sell his.

A Little Good News

When we watch the news on TV, we usually hear about such things as wars, accidents, and crimes. While it is important to know about these things, many people would like to hear more good news. An American woman named Geri Weis-Corbley decided in 1997 that more happy news should be (36). Since that year, she has been running the Good News Network website, which offers good news from around the world.

Weis-Corbley used to work for a TV company, filming and writing news stories. Based on her experience, she thought that most people would like to hear more good news. Every day, she searches the Internet for happy stories. She then puts them on her website. In September 2008, there was a lot of bad news. Several large American banks got into trouble, and many companies had to go out of business. Because of these (37), visitors to the Good News Network increased. This shows that when most news is bad, there are many people who want to see some good news instead.

Weis-Corbley believes that the media should be more (38). For example, when a small number of people do something bad, it is always in the news. She argues that we need to have good news as well as bad news so we can think about the good things in life. Tal Ben-Shahar, a professor of psychology at Harvard University, has a similar opinion. He says that only hearing bad news makes people see everything in a negative way. Sometimes, hearing good news can help us to have a more positive point of view.

From: Robert Wallace <rwallace@newstepmail.com>
 To: Don Parker <donparker23@mailaroundtheworld.com>
 Date: June 13, 2010
 Subject: Golf in September

Hi Don,

How are things at Langford Industries? I've been at Westland Services for a year now, but the time has gone really quickly. The job is really interesting, and I've learned a lot about marketing. Still, I miss working with you and all the other people I met when I was working at Langford Industries.

I remember you saying that you played golf sometimes. Well, I've started playing, too. My co-workers and I are going on a golfing trip from the 3rd to the 6th of September. We've chosen an area in South Carolina where there are many beautiful courses. Would you like to come along? My co-workers are really nice, and I think you'd get along well with them.

If you come with us, there will be eight people. Instead of staying at a hotel, we have decided to rent a cabin. We will have to cook our own meals in the cabin or eat out at restaurants, but it will still cost less than staying at a hotel. Two of my co-workers have offered to drive everyone to the cabin. It will take about six hours to get there. The trip should be a lot of fun, so let me know what you think.

Robert

(39) How do Robert and Don know each other?

- 1 Their companies do a lot of business together.
- 2 Their companies have offices in the same building.
- 3 They took a marketing class together a year ago.
- 4 They used to work together at Langford Industries.

(40) Robert wants Don to

- 1 teach one of his friends how to play golf.
- 2 join him and his co-workers on a golfing trip.
- 3 help him prepare for a company golf tournament.
- 4 tell him about some nice golf courses in South Carolina.

(41) What is one thing Robert says about the cabin?

- 1 It is not large enough for eight people.
- 2 The nearest golf course is six hours away.
- 3 It will be cheaper to stay there than at a hotel.
- 4 Two of his co-workers have offered to cook meals there.

Camels in Australia

When people think of animals in Australia, they usually think of kangaroos or koala bears. So it is surprising to learn that there are also many wild camels living in the country. In fact, there are more wild camels living in Australia than in any other country in the world.

Camels were first taken to Australia in the middle of the 19th century. They were brought from places like Africa and India. Camels can travel up to 70 kilometers a day and survive without water for a long time. Because of this, people often used them in the deserts of central and western Australia, where the weather is very hot and dry. They rode the camels and used them to carry goods over long distances.

This changed in the 1920s. At that time, cars and trucks were becoming more common, so the camels were no longer needed. Most of them were set free in the desert by their owners. Because there were no local animals that killed camels for food, their number grew very quickly. According to some experts, there are now about 1 million wild camels living in Australia, and their number is increasing rapidly each year.

In the past, when there were fewer camels, they did not cause many problems. Now, however, they have begun to harm trees and plants. Also, when they move to areas of farmland, they drink water and eat grass that is used for cows and sheep. For these reasons, the Australian government wants to control their number. One way to do this is to catch them so that they can be kept on farms and sold for their meat. However, many of the camels will remain in the desert and continue to remind people of Australia's interesting history.

(42)

People are usually surprised to learn that

- 1 camels originally came from Australia.
- 2 there are not enough camels in the world.
- 3 there are a lot of wild camels in Australia.
- 4 kangaroos belong to the same family as camels.

(43)

Why were camels used in central and western Australia?

- 1 They were able to live without food for 70 days.
- 2 They were able to work in hot and dry weather.
- 3 They could easily be found in the desert.
- 4 They could be taken to Africa and India safely.

(44)

After the 1920s, the number of camels grew quickly because

- 1 no other animals killed them for food.
- 2 they were cheaper than cars and trucks.
- 3 experts said they should be protected.
- 4 many people kept them as pets.

(45)

What is one reason the Australian government wants to control the number of camels?

- 1 It worries that camels may attack cows and sheep.
- 2 It wants to improve the quality of camel meat.
- 3 The camels are bad for the image of the country.
- 4 The camels are causing damage to trees and plants.
