Red Telephone Boxes

At the beginning of the 20th century, few people in Britain had a telephone in their home. The only way most people could make calls was to use a public telephone. At first, most public telephones were in stores, and people had to pay the store clerk to use them. As time passed, though, public telephone boxes began to be built (36). These allowed people to make calls on the street without being heard by other people. They also protected people from the rain. They were usually painted bright red. For many people, these red telephone boxes became a symbol of British life.

One problem with telephone boxes was that people sometimes damaged them by breaking their windows, writing on them, or trying to steal money from the telephones. In the 1980s and 1990s, it became more and more expensive to keep Britain's red telephone boxes in good condition. The telephone company began to replace them with ones that were easier to look after. However, many people did not like the (37) of these new telephone boxes. They preferred the look of the old red ones.

Some of the red telephone boxes have been sold to people who use them in (38) ways. Some have become decorations in gardens. Red telephone boxes have also been used in clothing stores as changing rooms. On one beach, there are even telephone-box showers for people who want to wash the sand off their feet. Communities that still have working red telephone boxes are often very proud of them and do their best to look after them.

Subject: Beaconsfield High School newspaper interview

Dear Mr. Terrino,

I am a student at Beaconsfield High School. Last week in history class, my classmates and I were shown part of Legends of Ancient Egypt. It was very exciting. My history teacher, Ms. Penn, told us afterwards that you directed the movie, and that you also went to Beaconsfield High. I got your e-mail address from your website.

The reason that I am writing this e-mail is that I would like to interview you for our school newspaper. The newspaper is printed every two months, and it is given to all students and teachers. If you agree to the interview, I'll ask you about how you started in the movie business and what it is like to make a movie. I'm sure our readers will also be interested in your memories of Beaconsfield High.

It says on your website that you live near Beaconsfield. If you can take part in the interview, please let me know a convenient time and place. I will come with another student, who will take photographs. I know you must be busy. If you don't have time to meet, I could send you a list of questions by e-mail, and you could reply with the answers.

Yours sincerely,
Kate Farley

- 3 Come to her home in Beaconsfield.
- 4 Take some photographs himself.

Horses to the Rescue

There are many search-and-rescue teams in North America that help people who become lost or hurt in forests and mountains. In places that are difficult to reach with cars or other vehicles, members of search-and-rescue teams sometimes use horses. Rescuers can travel further on horseback than they can on foot, and the horses can also carry equipment and injured people.

Recently, though, a horse trainer named Terry Nowacki has been showing that horses can be used for more than just transportation. Nowacki says that horses—just like dogs—can be trained to use their sense of smell to find people. Several years ago, Nowacki heard that there was a shortage of search-and-rescue dogs in his area, so he decided to try to train his horse Stormy to do the same type of work.

Nowacki says that training Stormy was surprisingly easy because horses find it easy to recognize the smell of humans. They also seem to enjoy looking for them. Nowacki would ask a stranger to hide on his farm, and then Stormy would look for him. When Stormy led Nowacki to the stranger, Nowacki gave the horse something to eat as a reward. Nowacki says that looking for people seems like a game to horses.

Since then, Nowacki has taught his methods to a number of search-and-rescue teams. He says that the people on the teams always need more training than their horses. The most important thing is for riders to learn about their horses' body language. For example, a horse might move its head in a certain way when it has picked up the smell of a human. Then the rider must allow the horse to follow the smell. Nowacki is confident that his techniques will help rescuers to save many lives in the future.

(42) Search-and-rescue teams in North America sometimes

- 1 buy horses because they are cheaper than cars.
- 2 help horses that have been injured in accidents.
- 3 ride on horses to reach people who are in trouble.
- 4 look for horses that are lost in forests and mountains.

(43) Why did Terry Nowacki start training his horse Stormy to help search-and-rescue teams?

- 1 One of his friends had become lost.
- 2 There were not enough trained dogs.
- 3 It had a better sense of smell than his other horses.
- 4 He had already trained other animals to find people.

(44) What is one reason that training Stormy was easier than Nowacki had expected?

- 1 Stormy remembered the area around the farm very well.
- 2 Stormy was happy to find people without getting extra food.
- 3 Stormy knew the people he was searching for.
- 4 Stormy seemed to enjoy doing the work.

(45) When Nowacki trains search-and-rescue teams, he tells riders to

- 1 learn the meaning of their horses' movements.
- 2 move their heads in the same way their horses do.
- 3 teach the people they rescue about his techniques.
- 4 help their horses recognize the smells of other horses.
