One day, Judith and her father were walking by a lake. There were some sailboats on the lake, and Judith and her father started to talk about sailing. Judith's uncle was good at making things, so they decided to ask him for advice.

E-mail at the Office

E-mails are a useful tool for business because they can be sent almost instantly to computers anywhere in the world. (36), many office workers say that they get too many e-mails. Research by the University of Glasgow and the University of Paisley in Scotland found that one-third of e-mail users experience stress because of the number of e-mails that they have to reply to. Also, many companies have found that e-mails sometimes stop employees from doing other work. The researchers found that some workers check their e-mail as often as 30 to 40 times an hour.

Because of these difficulties, some companies have introduced “No E-mail Fridays.” This was first done at a British company where it was found that employees were sending e-mails even though it would have been quicker to have a conversation. Usually on No E-mail Fridays, the companies still allow employees to use e-mail if it is very important. But they tell them to try to find other ways to (37). For example, instead of sending an e-mail, employees should call customers on the telephone or go to a co-worker’s desk to talk.

Some companies say that these No E-mail Fridays have been a great success. One small shipping company in the United States reported that its employees were (38) and got more work done. But at other companies, No E-mail Fridays do not seem to have worked so well. Often, employees needed to answer even more e-mails on the next Monday morning. Nevertheless, experts say that the days remind employees how important it is to send only e-mails that are necessary.

From: Diana Stevens <dianastevens@newstepmail.com>
 To: Philip Bradley <philipbradley@globalmailforfree.com>
 Date: January 22, 2012
 Subject: Birthday Party

Dear Philip,

Thanks for your e-mail. I'm really glad that you got the job at The Rockford Times. I always enjoyed the stories you wrote for the college newspaper, so I'm sure you'll be a great reporter. When will you start working there? I've been really busy since I started my new job at the natural-history museum last month. I show groups of schoolchildren around the museum. It's fun, but it's really hard work!

Do you remember my friend Susan? I took science classes with her in college. Well, it's her 23rd birthday on February 11, and I'm going to have a party for her at my apartment that day. It would be great if you could come. Please invite your girlfriend, too. I would love to meet her.

Susan says she doesn't want any presents for her birthday. But if you like, you can bring some snacks or drinks to share with the other guests. My apartment is a 15-minute walk from Rockford Station, but it's quite easy to find. I'm sending directions and a map with this e-mail.

Please let me know if you and your girlfriend can come.

Best wishes,

Diana

A New Route

In recent years, elephants in the African country of Kenya have faced many problems. One is that more people are living in places that used to be completely wild. As a result, it has become hard for elephants to move around. When they look for food, they have to go through villages or cross farmland. Sometimes, villagers kill elephants because they think that they will harm people or damage crops.

Over the last 10 years, an organization called the Mount Kenya Trust has been putting up fences. It hopes these fences will stop such problems between elephants and humans. In 2010, the organization decided to create an “elephant corridor.” This is a 28-kilometer-long narrow path of land that elephants can walk along freely. The elephant corridor connects two areas where elephants live—the highlands of Mount Kenya and the forests of Ngare Ndare. Before, it was hard for elephants to travel between the two areas because of farmland, roads, and buildings.

To complete the elephant corridor, the Mount Kenya Trust built a tunnel under a highway. Some wildlife experts thought that this was a bad idea. They said that elephants would not want to use a tunnel made by humans. To make the tunnel more attractive, workers put grass inside it. The tunnel was completed near the end of December 2010. A few days later, on New Year’s Day, officials at the Mount Kenya Trust were pleased when a young male elephant known as Tony went through the tunnel.

After that, scientists from a group called Save the Elephants started checking the movements of Tony and six other elephants. They want to see how often they use the elephant corridor. If they find that the corridor is a success, the idea will probably be copied in other countries.

(42) One problem in Kenya is that

- 1 people find it hard to move from place to place.
- 2 tourists are eating food that is needed by local people.
- 3 elephants have to go through places where people live.
- 4 many wild areas are being damaged by elephants.

(43) Why did the Mount Kenya Trust build the elephant corridor?

- 1 To make it easier for villagers to catch dangerous elephants.
- 2 To create more areas that people could use to build farms on.
- 3 To allow elephants to move freely between two different areas.
- 4 To stop people from building in the forests of Ngare Ndare.

(44) After the tunnel was finished in December 2010,

- 1 people started building a new highway close to it.
- 2 officials had to close it to put more grass inside.
- 3 workers made it wider to attract more elephants.
- 4 an elephant named Tony went through it.

(45) What will probably happen if scientists find that the elephant corridor is working well?

- 1 Elephant corridors will be built in other countries.
- 2 The tunnel under the highway will be closed.
- 3 Save the Elephants will stop its activities in Kenya.
- 4 Scientists will check the movements of other animals.
